I can't afford to replace everything I own

What if everything you own was destroyed by fire in your apartment, and you didn't have insurance? Your landlord should have insurance for the building, but that doesn't include your belongings.

43% of renters believe they don't have enough property — but you have more than you think.

It can add up if something goes wrong. You can't always control situations, especially what your neighbors do in their apartments. Avoid that risk by getting insurance.

Because mom and dad really do know best

It's time to head out on your own. Your parents insured their home and autos with SECURA, and so should you. On top of that, you get your parents' Valued Policyholder Discount.

That's up to a 15% savings!

Cha-Ching!

Plus, by law, you must have auto insurance, and many landlords require you to have renters insurance.

Not drinking one latte each month isn't so bad

For about the price of a coffee and sandwich at your local coffee shop, you can insure your personal belongings with renters insurance.

I have an insurance agent who I can trust

33% of people don't understand insurance and 25% don't know where to buy insurance.

No worries about where to get and learn about SECURA renters and auto insurance. Your parents already have an expert independent insurance agent that can save you money and get you the insurance you need. Talk to them or any SECURA agent.
